What the World Bank Knows but Won't Tell You

Richard Duffee studied philosophical psychology at the University of Chicago, earned an MA in English, then taught in high school, prison, and college. Intending to become a poor people's lawyer with the Legal Services Corporation, he earned a J.D. (with a certificate in International Law) at Pace Law School, but Clinton degraded the LSC to a telephone referral service. Duffee went to Southeast Asia, lived there nine years, taught at two Indian law schools and married into an Ex-Untouchable family. Discovering that it was 448 times easier for him to earn money than it was for a neighbor in India made him realize it was not necessary to consume more than the world average income adjusted for the purchasing power parity value of the currency of whatever country he was in.

The human benefit derived from an expenditure depends on who spends the money and what it is spent on. But when this perfectly obvious statement is quantified, the logical consequences are counterintuitive to people in developed countries who have not lived in an impoverished country. To calculate the actual economic conditions of countries, the World Bank and the United Nations Development Programme use formulae that flatly contradict all their public statements about the relative poverty of nations, confining the truth to their technical notes in order to save rich countries embarrassment.

Duffee began teaching the international dimensions of poverty in "Law and Poverty" courses in 1999 in India, first published his analysis in 2003, and has presented it at the World Social

Conversations: Foreclosure

Steve Meacham, a community organizer for City Life/Vida Urbana, is doing something about the foreclosure crisis, one foreclosure at a time.

Join us on Saturday, January 9 at 2:30 p.m. in the library at 700 Hartford Turnpike, Hamden, when we will watch and discuss this segment from the December 18, 2009 edition of Bill Moyers Journal. Refreshments will be served.

Sumerian Texts And The Book Of Genesis

The second in our series of monthly discussions on "The Bible from the Standpoint of Scientific and Historical Analysis" will be held on Saturday, January 23 from 3:00 - 5:00 p.m., in the library at 700 Hartford Turnpike in Hamden.

This episode will be concerned with comparing the Creation Story in the book of Genesis with the much older Sumerian myth known as "Enuma Elish." We'll be taking a look at the history of comparative studies of the texts, together with the role of major archeological discoveries in the 19th and 20th centuries.

We'll also view more of the film started in November. Handouts will be distributed, and refreshments will be served.

Here are two Wikipedia entries for those who would like to do some preparatory reading: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Enuma_Elish and http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Austin_Henry_Layard. In addition, a fascinating story about Layard is found in Chapter 21, "Layard: A Dilettante Outwits a Pasha," in the widely available book, Gods, Graves, and Scholars, by C. W. Ceram.

We cordially welcome everyone interested in this subject to join in these discussions. For further information, please call David Schafer, 203-281-6232, after January 10.

Book Discussion: "Surely you're joking, Mr. Feynman!"

The next book discussion will be on Saturday, January 30, 3 p.m. until 5 p.m. and we will meet at USNH, 700 Hartford Turnpike in Hamden. The book we will be reading is "Surely you're joking, Mr. Feynman! (Adventures of a Curious Character)" by Richard P. Feynman. Copies are available in Connecticut public libraries (try <http://www.iconn.org/FindALibraryInConnecticut.aspx?cat=consortia> to find libraries) as well as in book stores and online. An unabridged audio book is also available.

One of the greatest scientists of the twentieth century, as well as Doug Peary's June 2000 Humanist Hero, Feynman received the following awards during his career: Albert Einstein Award (1954), E. O. Lawrence Award (1962), Nobel Prize in Physics (1965), Oersted Medal (1972), National Medal of Science (1979).
